SUPERVISORS OF the five county Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation district include Allan Hunter, secretary, Campbell County; James C. Rea, Jr., chairman, Cumberland County; Charlie Rush, Appomattox County; John B. Bushmann, Buckingham County, and Ralph O. Tucker, vice chairman, Amherst County.

Flood Rehabilitation Projects Headline District's Activities

The Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District, which encompasses five Central Virginia counties, reports another active year in the field of soil and water conservation, one made especially active by their involvement in the Disaster Relief Program following the flood damage resulting from Hurricane Camille.

The Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District was possibly the hardest hit by the flood of any in the state as the flood waters swept through. While all the counties were affected by the high waters, the steeper terrain, narrower valleys, and slides amplified the destruction in Amherst County, the northernmost in the district.

Following the flood the district immediately offered assistance to the affected areas and, through its memorandum of understanding with the USDA and its working agreement with the Soil Conservation Service, requested that the Service accept the technical responsibility for handling the engineering type practices approved for cost sharing under the ASCS Disaster Program. In addition the SCS was requested to provide consultative service where necessary. A total of 342 referrals were received and are being serviced.

The district also requested that the Soil Conservation Service seek other disaster funds to be used specifically for the rehabilitation of and clearing of stream channels in the flood ravaged area. As a result of this request some $600,000 was received in the State, approximately $150,000 of it being used in the Robert E. Lee district. An additional 3.7 million dollars was made available to the state in January.

Where road crossings were involved on many of the streams it was necessary to realign or adjust the elevation of culvets. The district, through its local supervisors and in accordance with its memorandum of understanding with the State Department of Highways, helped to coordinate this work.

The Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District now looks to the coming year with an even greater awareness of the need for total conservation to minimize damage from any future flooding. Two major areas seem to provide the basis for meeting this goal: 1) the acceleration of the small watershed program, and 2) greater emphasis on total resource planning and development leading toward the formation of resource conservation and development projects.

Currently one pilot watershed project has been completed along with two watershed projects under Public Law 566. Two additional projects are in the construction phase, one is in the planning stage, and two project applications are pending approval. The district is also helping to promote the local interest being expressed in submitting an application for a project on Piney River in Amherst County, one of the streams hard hit by flooding last August.

The district is also promoting total resource development and planning. Requests have been submitted from many of the local governmental units asking for information on soil and water resources, land use, and recreational potential and in many instances the information has been already provided, The district has now requested that the Soil Conservation Service take the lead in assembling resource inventory information on its counties. The resources to be inventoried include: water, agricultural, grassland, forestry, biology, recreation, and soils and geology. The recreation inventories have been completed for all the district counties.

The 1970 objective for the district is to utilize the information from these inventories in updating its long range program. This will enable it to provide up to date information to county and regional planning commissions and to the local governing bodies. It is then hoped that resource development and conservation projects will result from the use of the available information.

Through the years the district has embraced a wider area in conservation than basic farm conservation practices, but it hasn't forgotten the need for such practices. Rather than eliminating the emphasis on farm conservation planning and application of approved conservation practices to the individual farm, it has and does recognize the principle that this type conservation is basic and that the efforts taking place in the total resource concept will only augment these local, individual activities.

This field of corn has been destroyed by the flood waters and silt from the flooding Tye River near the community of Roselands in Nelson County.

As the stream bed rehabilitation work nears completion a clean, straight, watershed, prepared for revegetation appears along previously debris strewn Indian Creek.

Rock slides accompanying the flooding also did their share of the damage as this picture, taken along Cub Creek shows. The creek channel has since been re-established and the banks seeded.

Roads in the flood area suffered damage as well as did the stream beds as the repair works to the bridge and approaches to this crossing over the Tye River on Route 56 indicate.

Prior to conservation service planned rehabilitation work many of the streams in the flood ravaged area appearred much like this area along Thrasher Creek.
